July 15, 2018 – Fifteenth Sunday in Ordinary Time

First Reading: Amos 7: 12-15

In this biographical interlude between Amos' five visions, we find Amaziah the priest of Bethel speaking to Amos with contempt. Then Amos tells him that his prophetic work all came about through God's choice of him and not the other way round.

Second Reading: Ephesians 1:3-14, or 1:3-10

This section is a blessing composed by St. Paul. He cites being a blest person because God chose him for adoption. He also acknowledges that our forgiveness comes about from Christ's death on the cross.

Gospel: Mark 6: 7-13

Mark presents the mission of the Twelve as an extension of Jesus' own ministry. Having no concern with extra baggage reflects the kind of trust in God that the mission involves. Nor were the Apostles to seek better accommodations than what were offered to them in their travels.

Reflection:

By our baptism all of us are called to be prophets. We have been given the authority over evil spirits: racism, poverty, addiction, religious intolerance, etc. We can be assured that Jesus has given us sufficient authority to overcome these evils. Shall we go out and draw from that authority we have been given?

So we ask ourselves:

- What evil do I feel called to confront?
- Can I trust that Jesus has already given me the authority I need to confront it?
